

● Let's think about what to eat during a disaster! Disaster Prevention and Safety Div. ☎042-338-6802

If you are prepared, you can still have hot meal even in the event of a disaster. In order to maintain both physical and mental health, 100 years have passed since the Great Kanto Earthquake, so let's think about what to eat in the event of a disaster.

[Contents of the refrigerator]

* Instead of eating emergency food right away when a disaster occurs, you can always keep a certain amount of food at home by storing a little more than usual in the refrigerator or freezer, and then buying new food as you eat them. You can stock up on it. Mineral water, canned food, retort food, meat and vegetables (pay attention to expiration dates), etc.

* Get a cassette stove. With a cassette stove, you can cook even if electricity or gas is not available, so you can enjoy hot meals. Eating a hot meal will give you energy.

Consume from what you have. By consuming perishable items first, such as fresh produce, you avoid wasting food. If the electricity goes out, you can store frozen food for a little longer by putting it in a cooler box.

[Preserved foods] Dried noodles and canned foods are easy to use on a daily basis and can be stored for long periods at room temperature. By preparing your favorite canned food, you can expect the meal to ease your depressed spirits during a disaster. Additionally, rice can be cooked in a hot water bath, making it a strong ally in times of disaster.

[Emergency food] Recently, there have been a variety of types of emergency food that can be stored for a long time. In addition to being available for purchase at home centers and internet sites, there are also supplies available through the Disaster Prevention and Safety Division.
